Letter To The Editor

Editor of the news:

The following are two excerpts from our Declaration of Independence: Prudence, indeed, will dictate that governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly all experience hath shewn, that mankind are more disposed to suffer, while evils are sufferable, than to right themselves by abolishing the forms to which they are accustomed. But when a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the object evinces a design to reduce them under absolute Despotism, it is their right, it is their duty, to throw off such government, and to provide new guards for their future security.

And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor.

Of the 56 signers of this Declaration, five of them were captured by the British as traitors and tortured before they died. Twelve had their homes ransacked and burned. Two lost their sons in the Revolutionary Army, another had two sons captured. Nine of the 56 fought and died from wounds or the hardships of the Revolutionary War. Many others lost their property, homes, business, wives and children. These men signed this document knowing that it would mean their death if they were captured.

Where are such statesmen of today, whose faith is in God, not government? Until this nation again recognizes who God is, we will not become one nation under God ever again.

The Pastor Speaks

FORGIVENESS

"God to forgive;
Best to forget!
Living we fret;
Dying we live."

Robert Browning wrote these lines catching the truth the Bible had been voicing through the centuries.

Forgiveness is a God given gift that few of us use. Yet we are told to forgive as He forgives us.

Browning is only echoing the age Old Bible truth it is "best to forget". Forgetting is certainly a divine quality. Man forgives but seldom forgets. Our Lord forgives and forgets as if it had never happened.

Browning was right in his little poem but human like, centuries late when he wrote "Dying we live". Centuries before the Scottish poet, Christ taught eternal life was just that - eternal. To die for him was to live forever.

And be kind to one another, tenderhearted, forgiving one another, as God in Christ forgave you." Ephesians 4:32

FOOD SHOPPER

By
Cathy B. Hinton
Virginia Department of Agriculture

It's hard to believe that before the Civil War people raised most of what they ate and also processed it themselves. Food additives in those days were limited to home-grown colorings and such things as salt, spices, and smoke, substances needed for preservation. Now, we are living in a different age - the age of modern food technology.

Many shoppers take processed foods for granted. But, do you remember when cottage cheese separated, cookies dried up in two days, canned vegetables were soft and mushy and those delicious marshmallows got too hard to toast? Without additives these foods would still have these characteristics. Just think about it, the old concept of bakery freshness -- good today, stale tomorrow.

Consumers enjoy the pleasures that food additives provide, but are concerned about what's going into their food. American consumers are protected by the most stringent food laws in the world. Any substance proposed to be used as a food additive must undergo strict testing. It can be legally used when test results show it is safe plus it performs an intended effect in the production, manufacture or storage of a food.

Additives are approved if there is a certainty that no harm will result if they are used over a lifetime. It is amazing how minute the amounts of additives are. For example, BHA and BHT are used to keep foods from turning rancid in a short time. Check the labels of baked goods or cereals and you'll probably see BHA or BHT. In the average American diet both of these additives are consumed in amounts slightly less than four parts per million. The amazing thing is that four parts per million in all the food a person might consume in a lifetime would equal about four mouthfuls.

Without additives your local food store would need a lot less room to sell what foods would be left. We would be forced to return to foods that have the variety and quality familiar to grandmother.

Comment on the International Sunday School lesson for Sunday, January 27, 1974.

Topic: Life in Christ.

I am the way, and the truth, and the life; no one comes to theFather, but by me. John 14:6.

Life is a road on which the individual moves from the beginning of his mortal existence to its end. There are various roads a person may take, but they all have but two destinations: one is God, the other is separation from God. It is God's desire that everyone choose Him as the destination for life; because of this desire, He has revealed the way and provided access to Himself.

A person cannot live in security and stability unless he can depend upon the faithfulness of others. He must be confident that his employer will pay him the agreed wages. He must be confident that the goods he buys, the material necessities of life, measure up to proper standards of quality; for example, he must have confidence that the food he buys is unspoiled. Whenever a person does not keep his word to another, he violates one of the essentials on which human relationships depend. Truth in human dealings is an essential of life.

In interpreting Himself and His mission in terms of life's essentials, Jesus gave to them a spiritual connotation. He is the Bread of life, to satisfy spiritual hunger, a want in man as real as physical hunger. He gives the water of life, which quenches spiritual thirst. He is Light, to enable those who follow Him to see clearly the path of life, avoid the pitfalls, find help to surmount its obstacles, and reach safely the one desirable destination. Because He loves people without reservation, He provides the example for each individual to love his fellows.

Now, in John's report of the dialogue Jesus had with His disciples after they had eaten the Passover meal together, Jesus identified Himself as the way, the truth, and the life. He used each of these terms in its spiritual connotation. He is the way to God, the truth of and about God, the life in God. Thus He is the answer to the basic questions men have about life's ultimate realities, the guide, even as He is the light, to the path, the revelation of God to human knowledge and experience, the giver of life which is everlasting.

But Jesus is more than guide to life's pathway which has God as its destination. Jesus is Himself that way. He declared that only through Him could a person come to God, the Father. This is a strong claim, and it refutes the claim that all religions are equally good or that all have the same objective. This claim of Jesus to be the one way of access to God explains why Christians offer prayers in the name of Jesus, communicating with God through the Son. In this claim of Jesus to be the one way to God, the truth of God, the life in God lies the basis for the Christian evangelistic and missionary effort.

In addition to being the way to God, Jesus is the truth of God. The fullest knowledge the human race has of God is what it knows of Jesus Christ: "If you had known me, you would have known my Father also."

Jesus is the truth of God in another sense, also. Human life is lived in terms of the reliability of promises. Jesus was the fulfillment of God's promises were shown to be true and dependable. If history shows God's truthfulness and faithfulness through sending the Savior, man can rely upon His promise to redeem from sin those who accept the atonement Jesus made in His death upon the Cross.

Jesus is life, and He gives life, without end, to those who trust Him. To give this life He came into the world. His resurrection from the dead is the earnest of the believer's resurrection, and he promised His disciples to prepare a place for them in His Father's house. Because He is truth, the believer may have full confidence that in his own experience he will realize promise.

Copies of the 1973 Virginia Corn performance trials are available from our office. Corn producers will be particularly interested in data on early corn hybrids. These are varieties that can be planted in late June and early July. There is data on high lysine and waxy varieties. One of the most helpful pieces of information that is available for the first time is tons per acre of 35% silage and per cent ears. Silage producers should study this data carefully.
